Mindsets for Success Project Management

CLARITY

Unhelpful:I Need to Jump In With No ClarityHelpful:I Can Think About My Direction

When you feel like you have to jump into a project without clarity, that's a really intimidating jump and can lead to procrastination. Instead it's more helpful to give yourself time to think about your direction.

For example, you can sit down with a piece of paper and a pen and give yourself 30 to 60 minutes to think about the different steps involved in a project. This helps you to get clear on what it will take to get the project done as well as gives you a path to move forward. In a way, taking time to think is like clearing a path through the jungle before plunging into it.

PROGRESS

Unhelpful: I Need to Complete a Project All at Once Helpful: I Can Make Progress on a Regular Basis

When you believe that you need to complete a project all at once, it can lead to procrastination because we rarely have huge expanses of free time. It can also create procrastination because working on a project for hours and hours at a time can be painful. Instead, it's more helpful to try to make progress on a regular basis. For example, you might try to block out two hours each week to move forward or even an hour. Moving toward your goal, even in small increments, is much better than waiting for the perfect time.

DELEGATION

Unhelpful: I Need to Do Everything Myself

Helpful: I Can Delegate Parts of Projects

When you believe that you need to do everything yourself, you can end up spending hours and hours--or even days--trying to figure out something that you don't know how to do that someone else could get done quickly. When you look at your list of actions that need to be completed, ask yourself: Do I need to do all of these or are some of these items that someone else could do for me? If some can be delegated, then seek out options to do so.

STRESS & TIMELINES

Unhelpful:I Always Need to Feel Really Stressed by DeadlinesHelpful:I Can Complete Projects Without Anxiety

When you assume that you need to be really stressed by deadlines, then you usually will create the circumstances to make that so. For example, you might wait until the last minute to get started or make projects much bigger and more complicated than they need to be or work to the deadline instead of giving yourself margin. But when you believe that it's possible that you can complete projects without anxiety, then you're more likely to take the actions that make that possible.

Unhelpful: I Need a Perfect Result Helpful: Done is Better Than Perfect

When you aim for perfection with projects, you set yourself up for issues. You may not start because you're concerned you can't get a perfect result or you may not finish because a project isn't perfect yet or you may spend a great deal of time on things that no one else will notice aiming for perfection. A more helpful approach is to look at what needs to be accomplished, look at how much time you have, and then do the best job you can in that amount of time. You'll end up getting more things to completion in much less time.
